Baltour the responsibility of deciding the matter, and in the next there seems to be a difference of view between himself and them. Almost, though not quite, always they regard the future through the fiscal lens. Not so the Prime Minister: He fobs the fiscal lens, and, beyond the tustomary and expected daties of Guyernmeat, gives bort little attention to anything class at present than the course of the war, its consequences and its portents. So we are taught, at any rate, by all that we know of it, of him, and of the mature of things.

course of the war, its consequences and its portents. So we are taught, at any rate, by all that we know of it, of him, and of the nature of things.

But there is much more than this to be said, of course. The risk of being caught in this midst of a General Election by some threatening accident or starting surprises is a serious consideration, yet not so serious as some others for aman in Mr. Balfour's position. And they are perfectly obvious took it is plain that he cannot contemplate as General Election in April or at any later time of the year with a confident assurance of success. He may think the chaoes in his favor; may rely upon being able to increase them greatly as soon as the conflict begins; but yet he must be conscious that be would offer himself for defeat as well as for victory. Unless superseded by very grave years in which case volunteer dissolution would become impossible), fineal reform is the question; upon which a General Election this year would almost entirely turn. Naturally, all the forces of the Uppension would be employed in making force Insel. The Dwte and Duchess of Connaught spent last hight at Arment and arrived here this morning at 10 o'clock. All the consular agents and the moodirish officials were waiting at the lauding-stage to velcome the Royal visitors. The two Princesses lauded first and rode to Karask, one on horseback and the other on a donley. The Dushess and saint followed later, and afterwards the Duke, with General Sir J. Maxwell. All went on donkeys. The party returned about noon, and the Duke and Duchess went on board their yacht after a short walk on the quay, while the Princesses went on a visit to the town.

Major and Brevet Lieutenant Colonel G. P. W. St. John, late commanding the Royal Artillery in Egypt, has been formally appointed brigade major for, R. A. at "Gib."

The five battalions of the Royal Garrison Regiment will be broken up on the let April. Officers who elect to do so may go on retired pay, and the remainder will be transferred to other regiments. The rank and file will be generously dealt with in the matter of bounty and indocements to settle down in South Africa, where the let; Yad, Ari, and 4th Battalions are, or Chanda, where the 5th Battalion is statuoud. Menu'l 14 years, (or over) service will be discharged on a modified pension.

The smart girdle lately issued to the R.F.A. is only to be worn on home service. Gunne going abroad will not be served out with it.
